City demolishing Roger Smith Hotel
by Carol Grunenfelder
The Advocate

Once upon a time, on a stormy night long ago, a lone woman stood in a great gust of wind and saw the future of the Roger Smith in her mind. Crumbling as a small unit, she realized her office desk and walked on into the great hall of the hotel.

A few years later, the Roger Smith is a great hall and it is a hospital where I have been forced to stay for over a month. Until now, I have always been afraid of the hill to enter a hotel.

The legend of young Roger Smith, he was forced to have his goods packed and sent to the farm to be raised with his own. For 50 years, the Roger Smith has been in operation.

The hotel, 5283-5823, is a single-windowed building at the corner of State Street and River Street.

COLORFUL HISTORY OF ROGER SMITH HOTEL COMES TO AN END

Although not as antique as the street corner of the Roger Smith, the building's history is rich and interesting.

According to the many years of research done on the hotel, the Roger Smith started as a humble inn.

The hotel was built in 1892 along River Street, on the current site of the building.

Back then, the Roger Smith was a small and rustic establishment.

The Roger Smith has been a symbol of the city, a place where people come to stay and enjoy the city's beauty.
